The first triennial cycle of Parashat Pinchas focuses on leadership, reward, and community structure. God praises Pinchas for his zealous act to end the plague, rewarding him with a covenant of peace and an eternal priesthood. Moses and Eleazar conduct a census of the Israelites to prepare the new generation for entry into the Promised Land. The tally records 601,730 Israelite men eligible for military service, with breakdowns by tribe. The text details how the Land of Israel will be allotted proportionally among the tribes through a lottery system. The cycle concludes by introducing the daughters of Zelophehad, who boldly petition for an inheritance in the land.
