Haftarah: Isaiah 54:1-10	857

This week's Torah portion focuses on creating a moral, empathetic, and safe society by protecting the most vulnerable people and animals. The reading outlines civil, domestic, and military rules designed to protect the vulnerable. Key laws include treating captive women with dignity, ensuring firstborn inheritance rights, and handling a rebellious child. It stresses kindness to animals, like letting a mother bird go before taking her eggs. Safety is highlighted through the duty to build guardrails on flat roofs. The text also bars certain nations, like Ammon and Moab, from marrying into the community because they lack hospitality. Ultimately, the Torah demands fairness, empathy, and personal responsibility in daily life. In the Haftara these legal concepts are transformed into the language of a deep spiritual relationship and reconciliation between God and Israel.
